

PAU Environmental Engineering Department (EED) was founded in 1994 under the Engineering Faculty of Pamukkale University and started her educational activities in 1995 by offering M.Sc. degrees in "Environmental Engineering". With regard to the vision of the department and to meet the needs of the era, a new undergraduate program with 30% of the courses in English, has been initiated as of Fall 2008.

The department currently houses two divisions, being "Environmental Sciences" and "Environmental Technology" and a robust faculty with young, dynamic, innovative, and highly qualified academics. The lab facilities conveniently accommodated in the Engineering Faculty Building and assigned for the use of the department provides the required infrastructure for the current undergraduate and graduate programs and for the ongoing scientific research activities.

The mission of the Environmental Engineering Department is to provide a premium and contemporary education to prepare her graduates as professionals capable of identifying, evaluating, and solving complex and multi-layered problems in the field of environmental science and engineering, to conduct and encourage fundamental and applied research with a focus of designing and implementing sound, feasible, and sustainable engineering solutions to the environmental real-world issues, to build-up the proficient expertise with a global, inter-disciplinary, and innovative perspective, to be a competent actor coordinating with the public administration, the industry, and the other local, national and, international bodies for implementation of the generated sustainable solutions.
